Course Requirements

Section attendance (this is no longer mandatory, but still strongly recommended). Take-home midterm exam (a choice of essay questions), due Tues., May 15; take-home final exam (ditto), due Tues., June 12. Students who receive an A- or higher on the midterm may choose to write a final paper (approximately 8–10 pages) in place of the final, on a topic to be discussed in advance with the instructor and/or the TA.

Texts

Immanuel Kant, Critique of Pure Reason, tr. Norman Kemp-Smith (ISBN: 1403911959).

The above text should be available at the Literary Guillotine. Some commentaries and secondary works are available on reserve at McHenry (see below).

For reasons I will discuss, we will be reading almost exclusively the text of the first (“A”) edition. Page numbers in both the first and second (“B”) editions are marked in the margin of Kemp-Smith’s translation. In a few cases you will have to pay careful attention to piece together what belongs to the A text (for example, there are places where the B text adds a few paragraphs to the middle of a section—those additional B-edition paragraphs are not part of the assigned reading).

I have put on reserve the following secondary texts, which you may or may not find useful: Walsh, Kant’s Criticism of Metaphysics; Gardner, Routledge Philosophy Guidebook to Kant and the Critique of Pure Reason; Strawson, The Bounds of Sense; Bennett, Kant’s Analytic and Kant’s Dialectic; Allison, Kant’s Transcendental Idealism; Guyer, ed., Cambridge Companion to Kant. (The first two on this list have been highly recommended to me as beginning-level texts, but I haven’t read them myself as of now; your mileage may vary. The others are somewhat more involved. Strawson and Bennett are basically anti-Kant—they claim to think that he’s a great philosopher, but attack and ridicule most of what he actually says—whereas Allison is basically pro-Kant. The Cambridge Companion is a collection of essays by various authors. There is plenty of other literature on Kant, of course.)
